

Radio broadcast deregulation has killed variety in radio programming in the past few years, resulting in a bland mush of music that all sounds the same. Further easing of the restrictions on radio station ownership will make radio even more boring. Rather than allowing the ownership of more radio stations by a few corporations, we should tighten up on the restrictions and reduce the number of stations a company can own.